The Appraisers and Allard & Sons Disagree as to Its Value.

The interior decoration for John Jacob Astor's palace are causing considerable trouble to the Custom-House officials. Mr. Astor conceived the idea that he would like to have his new palatial esidence represent, as far as possible, he interior of the Petit Trainor, th me of a former light of French nobility at Versailles. cent, of what they would have cost in this country. The appraisers' valuation did not satisfy Messrs. Allard & Sons, and their sounset, Cel, Ketchum, called on Collector Klibreth and demanded a re-appraisement, which will be accorded them. Toi. Ketchum sald that the appraisement was an enormous advance on the invoice valuation, and was onreasonably high. Among some of the articles chimerated in the invoice is a mantel of arved oak, the designing and carving if which are very rich. The invoice says it is worth $20, but the appraisers considered just three times as much about the proper figure.

it is worth $20. but the apprinsers about the proper figure. Deputy Collector Phelps, who attends to the Law Department of the Custom-House business, said that the goods are still in the general appraisers stores, and will probably remain there until the matter is settled.

For some time the Central Labor Union has been watching the importations of Allard & Sons very closely. The firm had had several heavy contracts for interior decorations, and had the work done abroad and sent here ready to be placed in position. This, they say, is detrimental to the interests of the American workmen, and they are endeavoring to find means to stop it. Allard & Sons have been in difficulty with the customs officials on several previous occasions. It was charged that they had conducted an extensive smugging scheme, but Deputy Collector Phelps said to-day that an investigation completely exonerated them.

The corner of Fourth and Howard streets. San Francisco, has a freak. William Ensberg's Sallie, which same is a much-prized tabby cat of the ordinary black and gray striped variety, is the mamma of a kitten which will be handicapped in her struggle through life by a shortage of bone in the regular complement of feet and legs commonly assigned to cats. As if to compensate in some degree for this lack of completion, says The Examiner, nature has assigned the wee kitty an extra ear. It is the right foreleg that is missing, and the third ear is attached to the left side of the kitty's crown, seeming to be an offshoot or branch of the regular ear on that side. "Sallie, Jr.," is now a month old, and is the pet and pride of her mother, who has been taiher an indifferent parent to her ordinary progeny. The three litters that priceded Sallie, ir, comprised three and four kittens each, all perfectly formed and with nothing to distinguish them from any other sets of black and gray kittens. As soon as they were old enough to care for themselves, or as long as Ensberg's employees would feed them Sallie cared nothing for them, and discarded them entirely as soon as possible. Sallie, ir, was alone in her entry to the world, and her mother manifested the greatest solicitude for her, any dog, no matter how big, can get a fight by useling around the little freek, and the men who manifest disceptible for any one petting her baby in a regular, respectful way, and her objection to any one petting her baby in (Special to The World.) At one time he advertised the "Battle of Trafalgar," with burning ships, blaz-ng oceans and other magnificent effects. He drew such a vivid pleture of that great naval encounter that the people rom the entire country side were at-

When the time arrived the showman brought his guiding hand to bear on he set piece, applied the match in the isual manner and retired to await the ensued.

The showman then stepped forward and addressed the crowd.

'It has not went off,' he remarked, and proceeded to investigate.
